BEAUTY EVOLVES OUT OF COMFORT

So Declares Louise Dresser When Asked For "Secrets"—Color Study and Charm Helps.

I used to wonder if the man who wrote "Oh, You Great Big Beautiful Doll" had visions of Louise Dresser while the Muse burned—but that was before I had talked to Louise Dresser. For no great big beautiful doll is the stunning blond Louise, but a sane, thoughtful and altogether very womanly woman.

"Beauty is a somewhat over-rated asset of the feminine bank account," said Miss Dresser in answer to my plea for "secrets." "Whether any one starts a discussion of it, I think of a friend from the west, who went abroad to feast her eyes on the beauties of Westminster Abbey and the Italian lakes and all year after little knowledge seekers in her home town kept writing to her to be sure to find out the latest methods of flesh reduction and hair retention and complexion beautification. 'Well, I believe in comfort—C-O-M-F-O-R-T—and health and calmness and living one day at a time and charm of manner; and if out of that combination beauty does not just naturally evolve something is radically wrong with the woman who is practicing my five cardinal virtues.'"

Miss Dresser was donning the Arverne Sack of Butte, Mont., the charming stenographer, who delights "Potash and Perlmutter" and the audiences of Cohan's theater—and with a final settling flit of the big butterfly black hat, she herself settled down to pay strict attention to me—and Beauty!

Her Pet Hobby. "Let's discuss your five cardinal points for one that comes in, but it seems to have a magnetic south of loveliness."

"All right," said obliging Miss Dresser. "We begin with my very pet hobby—comfort—C-O-M-F-O-R-T. Please have that put in the biggest type there is—for it is so important. Comfortable shoes—no more strained expressions that say as plainly as possible, 'Oh, if I only had a pair of slippers'—and into comfortable slippers! Now, why not wear comfortable shoes all the time—your feet will only bulge out somewhere if they are compressed into triple A when they yearn for the sanctuary of a C. Comfortable clothes—no choking collar bands or waist bands—or stiff, straitjacket corsets, when a pliable 'tricot' will so much better keep the natural line of the figure with the somewhat sloppy look the average woman gets when she tries to appear absolutely uncorseted. Your disposition will be sweeter if you have not the achingly painful irritation of clothes that bind and too strongly remind you of their existence. Your expression will be more charming, your eyes more sparkling, your mouth more ready—and you will be so much better able to enjoy life and meet trouble with a smile if you will just do away with the handicap of physical discomfort."

"The clothes of today may be immodest when they fall into the power of the woman who used to make the tailor made suit suggestive, but properly designed and worn they are graceful, modest and COMFORTABLE. "From comfort to health is a simple step, with outdoor life and sensibly chosen food to aid and abet in the search for preservation of health. If you are comfortable and healthy you can easily cultivate calmness, and if you are calm you won't let yourself get flustered and hurried about what happened yesterday or may happen tomorrow. You will learn to just live one day at a time and to get all the joy and work and sweetness possible in and out of the day. "The first four points mastered, you will feel so young and happy and 'springy'—instead of all shaken down into a rut—that it won't be a very difficult task to cultivate charm of manner. And that is the greatest aid to beauty I know. You never realize that a plain looking woman is almost lovely if she is charmingly courteous and sympathetic and sweet-mannered and unselfish of herself and interested in you. Charm of manner and becoming clothes bring out a clear complexion or cast a magical glow over dull one—and a homely woman sometimes manages to look more attractive than her pretty sister who is wearing the particular color that made some other girl she knew look so beautiful—but that is guaranteed to make her look her worst."

Try the three "C's"—COMFORT. Color-study and Charm for the acquisition of the one big B—that is Beauty. It will really pay you to try, for Louise Dresser, lecturer, practices exactly what she preaches. LILLIAN LAUFERTY.
